Kalona Organics' produce comes fresh from a community of Amish and Mennonite family farms. For generations our farms have used sustainable, organic farming techniques. Our produce reaps the benefits of their traditions and their spiritual appreciation of the natural environment.

In the middle of the 20th century agriculture and food systems took a dramatic change. Maximizing farm productivity became the focus when new plant technologies, more chemical use and mechanization came to fruition. This new modernization allowed larger farms to move forward with the new approach to agriculture, while family farms began to dissolve. Amish and Mennonite farms, on the other hand, went on with their tradition of farming their small plots of land for their families and small communities.

By continuing to farm in their traditional manner, our Amish and Mennonite farms protected their land from unforeseen costs to modern farming like erosion, topsoil depletion, and ground-water contamination. The quality of Kalona Organics produce is unmatched because it is grown in soil that is wonderfully rich and bountiful due to the respectful treatment of the land that is inherent to our farmers' traditions.
